SHORTENS LABOR! LESSENS PAIN! To young mothers especially the period of parturition is looked forward to with justified dread, and worry of its consequences to mother and child. This is only so however where the merits of

are unknown to the expectant mother. This boon to women robs child-birth of its terrors, shortens labor, lessens pain, lessens danger and evil results to Child and Mother and greatly diminishes danger of Puerperal (after child-birth) Fever.

This original preparation is scientifically prepared by chemists from fresh, pure herbs and roots, and while harmless to mother and child, acts directly on the parts to secure desired results in almost painless parturition, and by internal treatment only can this result be obtained.

We publish no references but will be pleased to refer inquiries to those who have used "Mother's Conning over my part for the even-publish." Correspondence solicited. Sold by all Druggists. "OTHELLO IN REAL LIFE."

I am about to relate an incident which occured more than twenty years ago, but every detail of it remains fresh in my memory. I was an actor then, I am an actor now; but with a difference: now I have made a name in my profession, then I was young and poor, but full of health and ambition. Young as I was, I had already made a position on the stage, and at the time I write of was engaged in playing leading Shakespearian parts in one of the minor theatres of a northern city. We had a most successful season, CITY of ALPENA and at the close of it were playing "Hamlet" and "Othello" on alternate nights, I myself taking leading LOW RATES.

I candidly admit, however, that t was not my acting that attracted the public. The magnet that drew the crowded houses was a certain Miss Vernon, who had been engaged as leading lady, and whose first Tuesday appearance had caused some sensation. She was a beautiful woman, with a slender, graceful figure, and gifted with a fine sympathetic voice.

Although not a great actress, it is certain her abilities were above the average, and justified her popularity. Off the stage her manner was cold and reserved. She repelled all attempts at intimacy. As a matter Blacksmith and of course, being an actress and a handsome woman, rumors were rife about her past life. It was said she In rear of my livery barn, River was married and had deserted her street, where I will be pleased to was married, and had deserted her husband after ruining him. For my own part I paid no attention to these stories, knowing how often rumor errs. One afternoon I was eating my dinner at a small, cosy inn that was a favorite of mine on account of the excellence of the cookery, when a gentleman entered the little dining room, and seated himself opposite to me, and ordered dinner. I knew it well, but always liked to be letter perfect; presently I looked up and saw my vis-a-vis gazing ra-my eyes, and smiled. "Excuse me, sir," he said, "but are you reading Shakespeare?"

Notice is hereby given, that on Friday, the 7th day of September, A. D. 1894, at two clock in the afternoon of said day, at the front door of the Court House, on Chisholm street, in the city of Alpena, county of Alpena, and state of Michigan, that being the building in which the Circuit Court for said county in which said mortgaged premises are situated is held, there will be soid at public auction, to the highest bidder, the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the said debt, the interest thereon, and said attorney fee, and all costs and charges allowed by law. I bowed, and drew my book towards me as an intimation that I wished to resume my reading, but he was not to be silenced.

"Forgive me," he said, "if I disturb you for a moment; but the fact is I have a great desire to introduce myself. I, too, am an actor. Here, sir, is my card; perhaps my name is not strange to you.' I looked at the card and read the name of a noted London tragedian My wish for solitude was banished. was highly flattered by such a shining light desiring my accquaintance, and readily responded to his advances, and after two hours' pleasant conversation parted with the promise of breakfasting with him next morning at his hotel. I felt sure he was in the theatre last night, although I did not see him. We met next morning and discussed a hearty breakfast, after which he took it into his head to give me a series of imitations of celebrated actors, some of whom I had seen. I was delighted, and warmly congratulated him on his mimetic powers, which, I believe, quite equalled Foote. "Ah," he said, sitting down, "mimicry has its disadvantages; it sometimes gets one into trouble, for you are constantly tempted to exercise it in season and out of season. For instance, I made a heavy bet in this very town, which I fear I shall lose. It relates to yourself, Crofton, and you will laugh at my audacity. You know I had seen you once or twice in 'Othello,' and speaking about you to a friend who had not seen you, I gave an imitation of your style." "Ah," said my friend, "the best imitation is little better than a caricature."

"Come," I said, "I will bet you two hundred dollars that I act the last scene in 'Othello,' at the Phœnix, so that neither the audience nor the actors on the stage will realize that it is not Crofton who is acting."-I quite forgot that I should have to obtain your consent before I- made the experiment.

"Done," said my friend. "So we shook hands and the bet was made." "I would willingly help you to win your bet," said I, "but really I don't see how it can be done."

I felt some sort of foreboding as of approaching calamity. At the close of the fourth act I found my substitute prepared to go on. His make up was splendid. With his darkened face and the similarity in our build we were very much alike .--Presently my name was called by the call-boy. "Now," said I. He rose quickly, gave a hasty glance at himself, and rapidly descended the stairs. I was curious to see how he would succeed. Donning a soft felt hat, and covering my costume with a long ulster, I stole down to the wings to watch him. He was just speaking the lines in the death scene ("When I have plucked the rose Repairing Shop, cannot give it vital growth again," and certainly the resemblance to my voice was marvelous. It was evident the audience were deceived .-Just then the manager unluckily

Othello has now unlocked the door to Emilia, who enters immediately after the murder. Up to now, with the exception of the extraordinary power of acting, there had been nothing remarkable about the preformance, but now surely the actor must be mad, for instead of questioning Emilia and hearing of Roderigo's death, as he should have done, he began at once to acclaim Othello's death speech, while poor
